

Learning English can be difficult since it is so different from Spanish and needs a lot of practice and patience but all this efforts are going to be worth it because it is one of the most spoken languages over the world.

The biggest difference between Saturday School and my English classes is the level, we are learning present continuous in my normal school while here we are focusing on the B2 writing and grammar. I think that the level I am studying in my school is A2 so it is so easy for me and I am always bored at class because I know practically everything and there isn't anything new.

Learning from native speakers is for me the best way to get used to different accents, the students could increase their English knowledge just for listening and talking to a native speaker. We could learn also some informal expressions that non-native speakers wouldn't know.

Another thing that has helped me improve my level of English has been watching movies and series in their original version with English subtitles. There are lots of actors with different accents so listening to them makes me able to improve my listening.

Learning English was not easy at all for me but now I am grateful because I can communicate with people around the world and make friends from another countries. I hope my level of English continues to increase and I could finally talk to native people without having to think what do I have to say.
